As on every packet, we note what the coffee reminds us of with three subjective flavours. In KATANA's case, it's the sweetness and juiciness of a nectarine. From the scent to rose water to rosehip, we think we detect a rose. And it reminds Artyom of a so-called nanjing cherry, a fruit somewhere between a cherry and a plum, which was abundant in his grandmother's garden in Kyjiw, but is still so unknown to us that there is not even a German entry on Wikipedia. At least not yet.
